Spend Your Vacation Dollar Wisely

As the primary vacation season of the year approaches, you might keep in mind the fact that it is possible to get something for your vacation dollar. It is also possible to be bled by those who would take advantage of the once-a-year vacationer.

One of the simple and amazing mistakes some people make is to start out on a vacation without advance reservations at the point of their destination. When they get there, they are at the mercy of the situation which exists, and as a result, many of them spend more money than they should.

Many of the winter vacation playgrounds of the rich are available to all of us during the primary vacation period of America — the summer.

Worse Than Wild Indians

On the Old Frontier when communities grew, the people living in them took care of the problem of "area development." No area development of the federal government should be responsible for planning and risk-taking necessary to open up a continent and build a nation.

Some good-sized straws blowing in the wind indicate times are now quite different with so many people busy cutting up the pie picked by our self-supporting ancestors.

About a year ago Congress approved the so-called Area Development Program to promote new industries and provide jobs in "depressed areas," although there probably are few areas so depressed they cannot help themselves. But this doesn't discourage political planners.

Government agencies and programs, once started, just grow regardless of need. The Rural Electrification Administration is a case in point. The job of bringing electric service to rural areas is 98 per cent complete — thanks to investor-owned power companies cooperating with REA.

We suggest that all those who like swimming, sunbathing, etc., take advantage of the bargain rates which are being offered by hotels and motels in the southern climates.

If your vacation is to be spent in the mountains, investigate the government parks, which offer facilities at surprisingly reasonable prices. A little advance planning will save you a lot of money. The only piece of advice we have for prospective vacationers is to start in time, so that they will not have to hurry. It is shocking how many vacations end in death for the vacationer — death on the highways, where about 35,000 Americans are slaughtered each year, and well over 100,000 seriously injured.

But those who administer the REA in no mood to do any "area development." No REA has started its own Rural Area Development program — RAD — not to be confused with the Area Development Program passed by Congress. Since nearly everyone has electric power and telephones, REA is now making 2 per cent loans to co-ops for reforestation in other lines of business using electricity — and this can include anything from a winter resort to a housing development.

We must look to our affairs or we will find our future being organized by federal planners, and the businesses on America's main streets — banks, stores and newspapers too — being preserved by the unbearable competition of big government-owned and subsidized federal projects.

The Old Frontier had its drawbacks and its wild Indians, but it had a climate that was a lot healthier for a great and growing nation, and a free and independent people.

LEHMAN FRANKLIN, JR.

Despite all efforts to be better educated, the nation, and especially the South, still has a crisis in meeting the need of the country's youth. It is the need for a full advantage of its most important raw material — its young people.

Although many state and especially Georgia have embarked on ambitious building programs and are gradually trying to increase teacher's salaries, there is still one major problem that needs to be covered by none of these means. This problem is education for the talented underprivileged youth.

In many cases, there seems to be an opposite trend. Educational expenses, particularly on the college level, are going up. In Whitesville, we have seen in college applications is causing an increase in college enrollment and an increase in the number of students being turned down. These encouraging figures do not note an increased emphasis on education but may well be misleading as to exactly what college education is taking.

The rise in college expenses are making it even more difficult for the underprivileged boy or girl who is desirous of a college education, which is becoming more and more essential today. The days of a student working his way through college are almost gone, and certainly are numbered when one considers that a minimum of about $6,000 is required for four years of college on the state university level.

On the other hand, some steps have been taken to make it easier for more young people to go to college. In 1958, the National Defense Education Act brought some measure of relief to young students hoping to go to college and to others already struggling their way through.

A recent survey shows the federal loans were particularly welcomed in the South. Last year, 22,000 young Southerners took advantage of this program.

But even so, this program which probably will be broadened in scope in the future did not solve the problem. The average loan has been around $500.

It might be mentioned that there are also many more scholarships available than before. But whether the person receives one of the available scholarships or an NDEA loan, neither will cover all his or her college expenses. A part of the money will have to come from other sources whether it is from the family or from part-time work or summer employment.

In either case, it's a long uphill road to a college degree for those below average means. Only the more determined and aggressive students can make it.

Some groups on the community level have begun to do something about this problem, but more is needed in all communities. This could provide worthwhile projects for civic, church and community organizations in this community, as well as all others.

Some sacrifices from the young person is reasonably expected, but who can convince a young person who can expect no aid from his family and who must rely wholly on himself that he too can get a college degree. It can be done, but to the younger generation stepping into a big and fast-changing world, it becomes a problem of seemingly mountainous proportions.

Thoughts Of An Oldster

by MAUDE BRANNEN

My Mother

I do not know the author of this article but I am it on to you. "She carried me under her heart. Loved me before I was born. Took God's hand in hers and walked through the valley of shadows that I might live; Bathed me when I was helpless. Gave warm milk from her own body when I was hungry. Rocked me to sleep when I was weepy.

Pillowed me on pillows softer than down. And sang to me with the voice of an angel. Held my hand when I learned to walk.

Suffered when I was sick. Nursed with my sorrow. Brenda Collins, Linda Akins, Sharon Allen and Lynn Sparks. Brenda Collins did a short skit: Linda Akins sang "A Good Man Is Hard To Find"; Sharon Allen sang "Calcutta" and Lynn Sparks played several piano solos.

The girls were accompanied by Mrs. H. C. Bland and Mrs. R. V. Willford on the piano. The girls were accompanied by Mrs. H. C. Bland and Mrs. R. V. Willford on the piano.

Queen Elizabeth became a pipe smoker at the suggestion of Sir Walter Raleigh who later became her boyfriend for many years. There is room for the imagination to believe the real reason she had him beheaded in later years was because he smoked a pipe with a low grade of smoking tobacco to which was added a mixture of low powder that made her sick and short of temper.

Queen Victoria would not permit the use of tobacco at her court in any form, not even permit a person in her presence with a tobacco pipe in his hand. The French always tried to become more dainty than their English neighbors, produced snuff and the silver snuff box. In time the back woodsman of America discovered the chewing qualities of the Twist, not the dance, but not until 1922 did an American lady have the nerve to sit on the observation car of a Pullman train in his quarters adjacent to hers.

The sweet sephers of love can even blow away the odor of tobacco smoke. The little parson hanging in a deer skin sack on the square back little suspected he was seeing a whole world turn its nose into a smoke stack, cigarettes become more valuable than food, used in the black market after World War I. I am a medium of exchange more highly prized than the gold nuggets that came from the bosom of mother earth. The Indians have gone West, the wooden ones into museums, the Americans enjoy their lung cancer, the Dukes, filthy rich, travel about the world, while the poor farmer works from dawn to dusk to grow the "weeds".

No doubt the expression "wooden head" came to use because drinks staggering out the blind doors of bars would see these six foot Indians standing on the sidewalk and feeling like a John L. Sullivan or Jack Dempsey half off and try to knock his teeth out. The results were always the same, broken knuckles or dripping blood. Around the base of everyone of these there was always to be found a lot of rotting banana peels and splashes of blood as reminders of carelessness and mighty blows. There was no benediction of growing grass to hide the spillovers. Frequently, country boys on their first trip to the city would be told "those tall red men are silent policemen to be spoken to and treated politely." From this area a younger family with the wife of the animal of the swamp being cautioned about the "big red policeman" went to Savannah with his father for the first time to "see the sights." Every time the boy passed a "red policeman", he spoke and tipped his hat. Becoming disgusted he finally confided to his father, "They are the most impolite men I have ever seen, and I am not going to speak to another one of them if they do arrest me."

About 150 of them loitered in mass. New years later, there are only us, reminders of another day the reason being sanitation. Cities tired of banana peels and obstructed sidewalks, ordinances were passed and the "red men" moved aside. Soon the customers were complaining and the wooden Indian cigar pipe came fore and ever.

It is not by the gray of the hair that one knows the signs or practices people use or do. Each and every little thing has a meaning, and one whether a wooden Indian, a

Style Revue Held May 1 At Center

The Adult Vocational Clothing Class held a style revue on Tuesday afternoon, May 1, at the Vocational Center on South College St. The public was invited to see the dresses modeled by members of the class who have just completed a course under the supervision of Mrs. J. E. Parrish, County Home Making Supervisor. There were displays also from the home furnishing and china painting classes.

Mrs. Parrish, wearing a lovely dress she made, welcomed the guests and gave a brief explanation of the instructional supervision she offers in the course. She said "No one need ever hesitate to enroll. We have young mothers and grandmothers, those who have never threaded a needle and talented and experienced seamstresses who come for instruction on the most up to date methods and advice on a special problem."

Those who participated in the revue included:

Libba Smith, who served as narrator, looking very smart in a basic black dress. Her three daughters, Sally, Ann and Susan were most attractive in dresses made by their mother.

Eubie Anderson was a lovely dark cotton. She matched her model. Mrs. Mary Beth Lewis Assistant Supervisor of Home Making Education from Milledgeville attended.

After the style revue Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Parrish visited in several homes to see draperies and lamp shades that had been made in the department. Cookies and punch were served to the guests by Mamie and Laura Banks.
